BROADWAY COMING TO ACADIA THEATRE, RUMFORD, DEC. 9-10-11

Evelyn Brent, Featured in "Broadway," Telling of Big Moments in New Photodrama

Has Biggest Scene She Ever Played In

Evelyn Brent, who plays the tensely dramatic role of Pearl, the revue girl, in "Broadway," the Universal super-film of the sensational New York play which comes to the Acadia Theatre on Monday, Dec. 9, believes that big scenes inevitably make big pictures. And in "Broadway," she says, there is possibly the biggest scene which she has ever played.

"Of course," she said, "I certainly don't mean that the scene is so big because I happened to play it, but that any actress would consider herself fortunate to have it to play. It is the scene where Pearl kills Steve Crandall—the thunderbolt of the story as it appeared on the stage."

Two sorts of big scenes, according to Miss Brent, are necessary to make a big picture; big spectacular scenes and big emotional scenes. Both being in the story, she says it is almost impossible for the picture to fall short of greatness.

In "Broadway," as it appeared on the New York stage during its run of 90 weeks, the audience was given only the emotional "big scene," but when Carl Laemmle, Jr., decided to produce the play as a picture and paid the record price of $275,000 for the screen rights, he determined to add to the picture the big spectacular scenes which it was impossible to present on the stage.

"And that decision," said Miss Brent, "is what makes of the film the super-production it is. The gorgeous Paradise Night Club, as seen in the picture in technicolor, is a climax of spectacle; and Pearl's revenge upon Steve, determination to make him pay for the gangster murder of her lover is the emotional climax."

Besides these climaxes, the second of which held New York theatregoers spell-bound for almost two years, "Broadway" has running through its entire action the tender thread of Roy Lane's love for Billie Moore—the sympathetic romance of a cabaret "hooper" and his team-mate, as played by Glenn Tryon and Norma Kennedy. "Broadway" plays the Acadia, Rumford, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 9-10-11.

Points For and Against the Lending of Books

A movement against lending books has been started in the interests of authors and booksellers. The argument is that the book lender makes book prices high because the borrower does not buy. Publishers would sell at least twice as many books if freely lending stopped.

This may or may not be true; there is no way of proving it. It may well be that the person who couldn't borrow a book from its private owner would get it from a library, or wouldn't get it at all. On the other hand, the borrower of a book sometimes takes such a liking to it that he buys it for his own collection, or for a Christmas or birthday gift.

What we find so hard to understand about the book business is that the publishers are opposed to any idea that tends to make reading easy and popular. They are opposed to book-buying clubs; they insist on expensive paper and stiff bindings; and yet they complain because the average individual refuses to gamble $2.50 to $3 on a blue jacket. No doubt the price of books would come down if there were more buyers; there would also be more buyers if the price should come down. —Detroit News.

Some Discomforts in Early Railroad Travel

When railroading in this country was in the experimental stage, now more than a century ago, a traveler related in an article published in papers of that time how he had to wait on the platform of the station at Charleston, S. C., for several hours after the scheduled departure of his train so the engineer and fireman might test their engine by running it back and forth.

As he, with other passengers, were seated in the tiny cars, the engine finally tugged and pulled until the train was well under way; but soon it began to slow down, and before long it stopped. Pine knots were shoved into the furnace door, steam was raised, and the little train was on its way again, but stopping every so often to "get-up steam." —Kansas City Star.

Lasting Qualities of Brick

Common brick was found in King Tut's tomb, in the ancient city of Ur in the Indus valley, and Rome was built of common brick. Among the outstanding buildings of history that mark the stability of common brick are Nero's Gold House, Colosseum at Rome, Carpenter hall, Thomas Jefferson's Monticello home, Independence hall, Babylon, French quarters in New Orleans, Wheat row in Washington, University of Vermont, Sewers and aqueducts built in Caesar's time of common brick are still in use today. The Apollon way was built entirely of brick. Italy is rich in artistic brick work.

Restless Eyes

According to a Russian scientist there is a certain rhythm to the movements of the human eye as well as to those of the heart. It roves back and forth at the rate of about 100 movements a minute.

Under normal conditions—that is, in quiet, familiar surroundings—the eyes remain at rest for a few seconds. But soon they resume their usual movements, sometimes from one side to another, sometimes up and down. It is believed by evolutionists that this characteristic restlessness of the eye

Is a 'throwback' to primitive times when men's ancestors had to be constantly on the watch for danger.

Patriotic: Eight-year Muriel had retired early, leaving her father and mother in the living room enjoying a radio program. Some time later her mother had occasion to go into the little girl's bedroom. When she turned on the light much to her surprise, she saw a small pajama-clad figure standing in the middle of her bed, mother said: "Why Muriel, you must lie down and go to sleep."

"Mother, my teacher says, when you hear 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' stand up no matter where you are," Muriel explained.

Both mother and daughter remained standing while the national anthem was being broadcast.

Berlin's Last Windmills

Among Berlin's vanished landmarks are its windmills and water wheels. Once numerous, there are now only two left. In the heart of the Tiergarten stand the remains of a water wheel, which is said to have been built more than 300 years ago, but which was last operated in 1837. Twenty feet off the road to the suburb of Zehlendorf is the last surviving windmill of the capital. It is still in fairly good condition, although it has been several decades since its huge blades last turned lazily in the wind.

Telescopes

There are two classes of telescopes—refracting and reflecting. Refracting telescopes transmit the rays through a combination of lenses, called the object glass; while the reflecting bring them to a focus by reflection from a concave mirror. In the axis of the telescope is a small mirror having its focus coincident with that of the large reflector and transmitting the light received from the latter back through a hole in the center of the large mirror to the eyepiece beyond.

Temptation Too Great for Presiding Officer

A bachelor, who is the best maker of decoy ducks on the south shore of Boston, is also the presiding officer of the board of trustees of his church. When a street widening demanded a strip off the front edge of the church property, a meeting of the trustees was held to consider it.

"Well, made a sale, did ye?" next day asked one of those curious citizens who want to know.

"Well, I don't know," said the churchman.

"Why, they going to take the land, anyway?"

"I'm not exactly sure."

"Held a meeting last night, didn't ye?"

"Oh, yes—held a meeting, all right."

"Warn't you there?"

"Yes, I was."

"Well, then—"

"I'll tell you," said the decoy maker. "I took the chair, and opened the meeting, and then I got a chance to ride home, so I left, and I don't really know just what they did do."

Romance From Missives in Cavern Post Office

In Wind Cave National park, south of Custer, S. D., is a cavern serving a unique purpose. Some 200 feet underground, the cavern is called the post office.

Here tourists and sightseers leave mementos, usually their names and addresses scribbled on the back of an envelope or some other piece of paper, and stuffed into one of hundreds of box-like formations on the rock walls. These natural crystalline formations suggest the idea of the post office.

A perusal of the "mail" reveals some interesting things. One finds names and addresses from every state in the Union and from foreign countries. It is permissible to take these, and many a miss or youth has visioned his or her future love as a half dozen or more names were selected.

Much Bacon on This Hog

The fossil skeleton of a giant hog which stood seven feet tall is mounted in Morrill hall at the University of Nebraska. The terrible pig in his prehistoric day was as high as the tallest modern motor car and had a wheel base of about 40 inches.

The fossil was dug up in Sioux county, Nebraska. Only two of the giants have ever been discovered, the other being smaller than the university's specimen. The pig, scientifically termed Dinolytus hollandi, lived during the late Oligocene or the early Miocene age, which would give him an antiquity of some 12,000,000 years. —Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Sanders meant well, but somehow he was always putting his foot in it.

At a dance he was presented to a young woman whose proportions were anything but meager. Sanders asked her for a dance.

"I can only spare you a one-step," she replied, "and I can't actually guarantee that, because I'm afraid my friends will be leaving before it takes place."

"Oh, how empty the room will seem when you're gone," gurgled Sanders.

Unearth Ancient Whale

The enormous skeleton of a 5,000-year-old Greenland whale was found at Kistinge, near Halmstad, Sweden, by workmen digging a ditch near the seashore. A monstrous jawbone measuring about thirteen feet in length was unearthed. On account of its size it was first taken by the workmen to be a part of the hull of an ancient vessel. The bone has been examined by archeologists, who estimate the whale to have lived at the end of the Ice age, about five thousand years ago.

Can Scientific Breeding Produce Men of Genius?

Human geniuses must be bred as race horses by combining "carefully selected pedigree stock," the president of the Eugenics Research association said at a meeting of the organization in New York. Whether that is true of the future or not one can't say. It has not been true in the past.

Physical development may be so influenced, and morays may be the descendants of morays. But genius and leadership appears in so many unexpected places and persons that we are unable to draw any diagram or arrange a plan whereby we can plot their creation. One genius may come out of a family which produces others of no account. Yet the brilliant intellect and the lazy nit-wit possessed the same parents.

Eugenists may prove that certain families over several generations have produced only mental defectives, while other families have given society a high grade of superior intelligence. But there are often exceptions to uphold or break the rule.

But genius is hard to trace. We do not know why one man becomes a great leader or a wonderful engineer.

It may be heredity, or environment, or education, or what? That man must continue to advance through evolution and better breeding is undoubtedly true, but that we can create a genius by planning is yet to be proven. No age has seen so many geniuses as the present, and eugenics had nothing whatever to do with the manufacture of this wealth of brains.—Miami Herald.

Growth of Clams

From two to four years is required for clams to grow to edible size. The exact time depends on food conditions, temperature of the water and climate. Some clams living under ideal conditions become edible in a year's time.

DISCOVERY OF NORTH POLE

The North Pole, after standing a siege of over four centuries, was at last conquered by man. Two men, Admiral Peary and Dr. Cook, laid claim to the discovery. Cook maintained that he discovered the Pole in 1894, a year earlier than Peary, but the latter is generally given the credit because of the statistics and markings on his instruments.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Hoover's Prosperity Program Goes Well—China Asks Russia Be Checked.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

BUSINESS as usual—and then some. This appears to be the motto of the responses made to President Hoover's call and by the programs disclosed in the series of conferences held in Washington at his summons. The last of these conferences with different groups was that with the representatives of public utilities on Wednesday. They were the spokesmen for the electric power and light interests, the gas companies and the street railways, and after having held separate meetings in New York to canvass the situation in their respective fields, they went to the National Capital prepared to assist the President in his program for stabilizing business conditions and assuring the continuance of the country's prosperity. They told him their organizations would spend about $1,500,000 in improvement and expansion during 1930.

Mr. Hoover sent a message to the governors of all the states asking that they co-operate by canvassing the state, municipal and county programs and speeding up, so far as possible, public works as a further employment. The response was most gratifying, giving assurance of the expenditure of millions for road building and other public improvements. Pennsylvania headed the list of states making definite pledges, announcing that $125,000,000 would be available in 1930 for roads and public buildings and that it would be distributed through out the state with a view to taking up any employment slack that occurs.

Leaders of farm organizations met with the President Monday, Secretary of Agriculture Hyde and Chairman Lammie of the farm board being present. Mr. Hyde announced that they were in hearty accord with the Hoover program and promised to aid it in every possible way, and headed off the general opinion expressed was that confidence has been gained in agriculture and that the morale of agriculture is now better than it has been for years past. Except in short crop areas there has been genuine improvement in agriculture and an increased income, and therefore an increased buying power this year.

RAILROAD executives having announced extensive plans for expansion and improvement, leading industrialists having promised there shall be no reduction in wages, and heads of organized labor having pledged their word that there shall be no demands for increases in pay next year; and numerous associations of manufacturers and merchandisers reporting good conditions in their fields, it would seem that the prospects for continued prosperity are indeed bright. The nation is determined to show that the speculative crash has not done vital damage. Edward N. Hurley, one of Chicago's best headed business men and a former president of the Illinois Manufacturers' association put the matter so well that he is worth quoting.

"There is nothing wrong with American business and the outlook for 1930 is most encouraging," Mr. Hurley declared. "We have everything today that we had an September 1 in the way of brave wealth and earned income. Nothing is going to exceed some of the gains in the amount of profits which American industries might earn in 1930."

"The decline of so-called stock values from about $100,000,000,000 on September 1 to some $75,000,000,000 now does not represent the disappearance of any of the material wealth of the country. It only represents a temporary decline, because it will be recovered and changed capital and the in-creased buying power of the people will be restored."

is exercised by a speculative securities market."

As a culmination of the President's conferences, some two hundred of the country's leading business men were invited by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States to gather in Washington on December 5. It was announced that Mr. Hoover would open this conference, the result of which was expected to be the formation of a business council for continuing study of business conditions and the co-ordination of activities. A summary of business conditions, published by the federal reserve board, reveals a higher industrial activity during the month of October last than in the same period of 1928, although there was a decline in both industrial production and factory employment as compared with the preceding month.

CHINA'S Nationalist government and the governments of the three eastern provinces of China have appealed to President Hoover, the League of Nations and the powers signatories of the Kellogg pact for action to halt Russia's invasion of Manchuria and to punish the Soviets for the massacre of Chinese citizens. Russia's aggression is termed a deliberate violation of the Kellogg treaty, which both Russia and China signed. The message from the Manchurian provinces was dispatched directly to President Hoover. It cited many definite instances of Russian invasions, raids and massacres naming places more than 100 miles within the borderlines, and added: "that if the world tolerates this Russian policy it means 'the triumph of Bolshevism and the end of humanity; also the end of the north-east pact, which certainly is not the intention of the United States and other signatory powers.' The appeals and demands were equally specific.

It was said in Washington that there was an indication that the State department would take any immediate action in response to the call from Manchuria. And the officials there were rather at a loss to know what could be done about it, since the Kellogg pact contains no sanctions and depends wholly on public opinion for its effectiveness.

Within the last two weeks the Soviet invaders have made decided advances in both eastern and western Manchuria. Hailar was captured, as were Muling and other important points, and it looked as if the Russians were getting ready to close in on Harbin from both sides. Chinese troops everywhere were reported to be retreating almost without offering resistance, and thousands of them were made prisoners and disarmed. Those still in the field were described as lacking sufficient food, ammunition and winter clothing.

Japan was excited by the push into Manchuria, for she has many nationalities resident there. The Japanese ambassador to Moscow, Tokichi Tonaka, told the Soviet government that Japan demanded that full protection be given its citizens in Manchuria, and Russia promised to exercise every care. The military group is very strong in Japan and there is some reason to believe it has been preparing to have the country eventually enter the conflict on the side of China.

ONE more of the great figures of the world war—perhaps the greatest passed with the death of Georges Clemenceau, who, as premier, guided the destinies of France during the most critical years of the mighty conflict and by his tremendous courage and ability kept his countrymen served to their task until victory was achieved. The old giant, he had passed his eighty-ninth year, died in Paris of pneumonia after many hours of suffering and the next day the "Father of Victories" as France called him when he was its idol, was laid to rest in a little village of the Vendee with only a dozen to witness the interment. In accordance with his instructions there was no state funeral, nor were there any religious rites, for Clemenceau was an avowed atheist. Premier Laval, however, ordered all flags at half staff and the firing of a salute of 101 guns such as was fired on November 11, 1918, in honor of the armistice. And the Sunday following the funeral the world war veterans marched past the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in honor of the Tiger

DEATH last week also claimed Francis Emory Warren, United States senator from Wyoming, who had the distinction of serving longer in the senate than any other man. He was a member of that body for thirty-seven consecutive years. A state funeral for Mr. Warren was held in the senate chamber, with President Hoover and his cabinet, Chief Justice Taft and his associates of the Supreme court, members of the senate and house and the entire diplomatic corps in attendance. The body was then taken to Cheyenne. Senator Warren's death removes one of the last three survivors of the Civil war who held high office in Washington. Warren served in the Union forces with Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes of the Supreme court. Representative Charles M. Steedman of North Carolina served the Confederacy.

Another well known American who passed away was Raymond Hitchcock, actor and musical comedy star, who died suddenly in Los Angeles from a heart attack. He had been in poor health since last May.

Lieut. George T. Cuddihy, one of the best pilots in the navy, was instantly killed when an airplane which he was testing at Washington crashed. Cuddihy, who was thirty-three years old, graduated from the Naval academy in 1917, served in the World war and later entered the aviation branch. He distinguished himself in the Schneider cup and other races, and in 1927 flew over the Andes.

TOKYO correspondents sent over what purported to be the Japanese program for the London naval conference, and it contained the demand for a 10-10-7 ratio in cruiser strength and other auxiliary ships, as well as a reduction in the size of capital ships. It seemed certain the United States would oppose the increase of Japan's ratio in cruisers, but later dispatches from Japan said its delegates had received private instructions to accept considerable less than 70 per cent of the British and American auxiliary navies.

France and Italy were still trying in vain to reach a preliminary agreement on policy in the conference. The principle obstacle is that the Italians insist on complete parity with France in all categories of warships. The French oppose this on the ground that Italy has only Mediterranean interests, while France also requires sea power in the Atlantic and in the English channel. The French also oppose giving Italy parity because of France's widely distributed colonial empire, whereas Italy's possessions are chiefly Tripoli and the area facing the Red sea.

THE text of the trust agreement for the Bank of International Settlements has been made public by a Paris correspondent. The principal provisions relative to the issuance and marketing of bonds are contained in article 12, which provides that the international bank, as trustee, will be guided in matters relative to mobilization of annuities "by the provisions of the (Young) plan which governs mobilization." The bank also will inform the creditor governments when it seems "practically possible" to proceed with the issuance of bonds.

CREATION of five new cardinals was announced at the Vatican, bringing the membership of the sacred college to 42, of whom 33 are non-Italians. The new list included the Most Rev. Joseph Maclellan, archbishop of Armagh; Most Rev. Cerejela, patriarch of Lisbon; Archbishop Verger of Paris; Archbishop Lavitrano of Palermo and Archbishop Minoretti of Genoa.

GEN. C. P. SUMMERALL, chief of staff, in his annual report recommends the enactment of a selective service law to operate in war time as the one method of procuring new units for the "far from complete" infantry division of the army. In other respects the report reflects a generally satisfactory condition throughout the army, says the decentralization system is justified, and that increased ration allowances have greatly improved the morale of the troops.
